INNOVATION MATTERS

At the ultra modern "Riccardo Cavalleroni" R&D Centre, the numbers do the talking: 1,500 m² of space, over 35 technical specialists, two research units, one each for the Architectural & Deco and Yachting business units, and 3% of turnover invested in innovation annually.

In the Yachting area, the Research & Development laboratory acts as an incubator of new production processes and painting systems designed to enhance the beauty and performance of any type of superyacht and yacht, drawing on cooperation agreements with research centres and universities recognised at European and international level, including the SP Technical Research Institute of Sweden, Göteborg University, Portsmouth University and CNR, to develop innovative projects financed by the European Union such as LEAF (Low Emission AntiFouling).

These joint projects have contributed to the professional training of Boero YachtCoatings' highly qualified researchers and technical staff, who today represent one of the company's most valuable assets and develop individual products specifically for the yachting sector, from primers to fillers and from antifouling products to enamels.

Research is focus on product innovation (smart coating, sustainability, green chemistry), integration of new technologies into existing production processes, environmental impact reduction (VOC, REACH) and certification procedures (BPR, CLP). Scientific research is ideally suited to the range and quality of the company's products, which deliver performance at the highest level, while embodying commitment to the environment and compliance with regulations.

Boero Group is one of very few business concerns in Italy able to boast a history spanning two centuries.

It all began in 1831, with the acquisition of a small factory that made white lead powder. As far back as the early 1900s, a finely-honed business sense combined with leading edge technology drove rapid development in paint production for the Architectural & Deco industry. The company also acquired professional expertise in the yacht paint sector, encouraging its owners to invest in the 1970s in a Business Unit devoted exclusively to the yacht segment.

As a result, Boero Group today can boast a position of leadership in three strategic sectors: Architectural & Deco, Yachting and Marine. An integrated company that continues to develop expertise and add value in all corporate processes: research, innovation, production, distribution, assistance and care for the environment. A past that informs the present and looks to the future.

An ongoing commitment to work to the best of our ability, with confidence in progress and a focus on sustainability. A culture of colour with deep roots in tradition and expertise across multiple sectors.
